Blackie from Narcos

In the eighth episode of the second season of Narcos when Murphy and Pena are interrogating Blackie the following dialogue can be heard: Pena: Blackie Blackie, Blackie, Blackie. [Sighs] What name did your mother give you? Blackie: Nelson Hernandez... Lucumi. Pena: Lucumi? From the Pacific. Lucumi, they found explosive residue on your hands. On your jacket, everywhere. They're going to blame you for that bomb, Lucumi. What made me curious about this is that both Murphy and Pena are initially surprised when hearing this unusual, African-sounding name, but then Pena quickly associates it with the Pacific. I've done a quick research and found Lucumi people, but they live in Cuba, so have no association with the Pacific ocean. Then I found this explanation from the book Afro-Latino Voices: Translations of Early Modern Ibero-Atlantic Narratives: lucumi was a term used by transatlantic slave traders to identify slaves that the Yoruba tribe was selling to them and was used as a self-identification term by the descendants of these slaves, that lived in Western South America and called themselves de casta lucumi ("Of the Lucumi caste"). This one definitely seems related, but if Lucumi is not a family name, but a name of the people (or "caste") then why Blackie gave it as a name that his mother gave him and Pena was referring to him using it? Could someone having knowledge on Colombian/South American culture explain that? Edit: The information about lucumi being a name of the slaves of Yoruba origin can also be found in Spanish language Wikipedia (provided that the Google translation got it right). However both sources refer to a term used in 18th century, I didn't found any information regarding its current use, apart from being an actual family name. The story of Pablo Escobar, one of the most infamous drug kingpins in modern history, has fascinated people long before his death in — which can also explain the success of Netflix's original drama Narcos that follows Escobar and the DEA agents who pursued him throughout the late '70s to early '90s. But, for those who were introduced to the life of Escobar and his family through the Netflix drama, you may be wondering about what happened to the real people the show is based on. For instance: What happened to Pablo Escobar's wife? In NarcosEscobar's wife goes by Tata — a nickname used for the drug kingpin's real life wife, Maria Victoria Henao. Escobar and Henao married inwhen she was 15 years old he was 26 at the time and remained together until his death in They had two children: Juan Pablo, who has since changed his name to Sebastian Marroquin, and Manuela. For the most part, Henao has stayed under the radar since leaving Colombia, though there was a brief incident in Argentina in BBC News reported that Henao, who had by that time changed her name to Victoria Henao Vallejos, was arrested along with her son on "suspicion of money laundering. Although Henao and her son were brought before a judge, they were not officially charged. They want to try the ghost of Pablo Escobar because they want to prove that Argentina is combating drug trafficking. After this particular incident, Escobar's widow did not resurface in the media and it seems likely that she's trying to stay out of the public eye. Although Narcos may inspire viewers of the show to learn more about the wife of the famed drug trafficker, there doesn't seem to be much to find. She has lived a relatively quiet life aside from her infamous husband. Nelson hernandez blackie A location manager for "Narcos" was found shot to death after scouting out a rural part of Mexico to film the Netflix series' next season. The series will next focus on Mexico's notorious cartels. Portal was found in his car with multiple gunshot wounds, but it is unclear where on his body or how many, according to Deadline. The car was found on an unnamed dirt road in San Bartolo Actopan — which is part of the Temascalapa municipality — about miles south of the U. The area is widely known to be plagued with drug-related killings as it borders the state of Hidalgo. In July, the Los Angeles Times reported that homicides due to Mexico's drug war had spiked to record levels. Portal had worked in the entertainment industry as a locations manager for more than 10 years, including jobs on "Apocalypt" and "Specter," which was filmed in Zocalo, Mexico. Claudio Barrera, a spokesperson for the Attorney General of the State of Mexico, offered only speculation as to what happened to Portal since there are no known witnesses to his death, according to local reports. Barrera suggested that whoever shot him may have thought he was collecting intel and followed him. A friend of Portal's, who was pictured with him in an image on Facebook, shared a post suggesting that the truth behind the death may never be known. Portal's pal Geomirino Denti said colleagues are planning to dedicate all projects filmed on Sunday to the friend that they lost. Denti said he hoped it would give Carlos' death some dignity. The first three seasons of "Narcos" were primarily filmed in Colombia, with scenes also having been shot in Panama and the United States. With Nicole Hensley. Skip to content. Netflix confirmed Portal's role in the Daily News. The network added that circumstances surrounding the death remain unclear. Carlos Munoz Portal, 37, was killed while scouting locations for the Netflix show "Narcos" in Mexico. An investigation into his death is ongoing. Portal's last Instagram post was shared Sunday of a field in his hometown of Puebla, Mexico. Most Read. Nurses at a hospital in Westchester leave coronavirus ICU shift to find tires slashed. Popeye, recently released from a maximum security prison in Colombia after serving 23 years and three months, claims to have participated in at least killings in the s and 90s. Popeye — a short, amicable man — spoke with The Tico Times in a recent telephone interview from Colombia. While we spoke, it was hard to imagine the extent of terror he and his fellow gangsters unleashed on their country. In fact, his boss, Escobar, visited the latter two on several occasions to arrange shipments of cocaine from South America to the United States or to hide out from authorities and other enemies. Limon narcos real life At one point the Medellin narcos were some of the richest people in the entire world even having their wealth recognized by the likes of Forbes magazine. Pablo Escobar was famously killed in after many of his compatriots had already turned themselves in. He was shot down amidst police crossfire while fleeing across the rooftops of Medellín, Colombia. Talk of the famous Colombian cocaine cowboys had died down in the last decade until Netflix released their hit show Narcos to critical acclaim. These are the real people who were by the side of Pablo Escobar through the good and the worst times. The cousin and right hand man of Pablo Escobar, Gaviria also served as the financial head of the uber prosperous Medellín cartel. Gaviria stacked up a fortune that is comparable to the other Medellín cartel founders but he kept a low profile in hopes of preserving his lavish lifestyle for future generations. His death has been widely speculated to this day. The death of his cousin had immense impact on Escobar and he turned himself in shortly thereafter. Instead he sent his assistant who relayed the funeral to Escobar via radio. Until the day she died she defended the honor of her son and loved him despite the countless gruesome murders that he ordered. She died in the age of 89 in the town of Medellín where her son also passed away. On the day that Pablo Escobar was gunned down on the rooftops of Medellín he had an unmailed letter to his mother placed in his pocket. Hermlida was on a mission to spread the word about all of the good that her son did so that his legacy could live on. Chilean star Paulina Garcia plays Hermlida in the Netflix series Narcos and she looks far different in real life than she does in her wig and makeup for the show. It was after shots were fired that Escobar pulled out two pistols and also fired back at officers while running on the rooftops in Colombia. After the two men opened fire back at officers, the police answered with automatic rifles at will. Both El Limon and Escobar were gunned down at this point in the shootout. The whole country of Colombia mourned that day since Escobar did give a lot back to the war torn communities of the nation. Many think that El Limon offered his boss in order to protect his life from being taken by police. Only those two men who died on the roof that day will ever know the truth. Blackie narcos actor To improve your visit to our site, take a minute and upgrade your browser. One time in Medellín, I got my hair cut by a woman who swore that Pablo Escobar, the notorious Colombian drug lord, was still alive. She had spotted him a few years back, reading a newspaper in his childhood stomping grounds of Envigado. How could she be sure it was him? Escobar, his scariousand their female escorts used to frequent her old salon in Laureles, the neighborhood where Escobar was killed or not in —by the Colombian National Police, or U. Delta Force snipers, or rival drug lords, or himself, depending on which version you lend credence to. She was there as they lowered the body of a shoeless, bearded vagabond off the ceramic-tiled roof, his cratered face caked in blood. Like Thomas Friedman on a deadline, his commentary is a bottomless fountain of self-assured banality, the sole discernible purpose of which is to reinforce the mystery of life in the Global South. Granted, in a Friedman column, the barber would have been a cab driver. The show debuted last summer with a plagiarized epigraph on magical realism that never gets justified in the storytelling. After 20 hours of pseudo-documentary exploration, that seems to be all Narcos has to say about the life and death of Pablo Escobar. The worst thing about Narcos, though, is that it believes it is saying much more. From a narrative standpoint, Season 2 is a noted improvement. Steadier pacing also ups the ante on the manhunt to catch, and later simply to kill, Escobar. That more players get in on the action only adds to the mounting sense of claustrophobia. The outcome may be predetermined, but Narcos will make you sweat out each ambush, raid, and labyrinthine chase through the Medellín comunas. Wagner Moura put on 40 pounds to play Escobar, and the sheer physicality he brings to the role helps make up for the fact that his paisea accent still comes out flatter than a stale area. His is a brooding, almost fearful Escobar, cornered, vulnerable, and all the more terrible for it. The extent of his backstory is a pregnant girlfriend who appears in two scenes before being murdered. But despite admirable performances from the actresses themselves, the new roles are shallow in their conception and secondary in their importance. Her departure inspires Murphy to assault a stranger and drink, and the rest of us to wonder what she was doing on the show in the first place. But as the circle closes in around them, the show sacrifices the power she holds in their relationship to move the plot. The problem is that Narcos relies on doctored history to arrive at that conclusion. Fidel, the U. Narcos has made a genuine attempt to reckon with the moral emptiness of defeating Escobar on those terms. But Narcos is invested in the myth of Pablo Escobar, which means it has also bought into the premise that the decision to unleash hell on Colombia was a natural response to a singular, extraordinary danger. The cumulative effect of these and countless other revisions is to rationalize Los Pepes as an aberration borne of specific conditions, the misguided but well-intentioned byproduct of a misguided but well-intentioned drug war. Maritza narcos Set and filmed in Colombiasseasons 1 and 2 are based on the story of drug kingpin Pablo Escobarwho became a billionaire through the production and distribution of cocaine. The series also focuses on Escobar's interactions with drug lords, Drug Enforcement Administration DEA agents, and various opposition entities. Season 1, comprising 10 episodes, originally aired on August 28,as a Netflix exclusive. The new series, released on November 16,[6] is set in Mexico in the s. Season 1 chronicles the life of Pablo Escobar from the late s, when he first began manufacturing cocaine, to July The show relates the main events that happened in Colombia during this period and Escobar's relationship to them. The series depicts how Escobar first became involved in the cocaine trade in Colombia. They expand beyond Moreno's small cocaine processing lab by building additional, larger labs in the rainforest and, using the expertise of Carlos Lehdertransport their product in bulk to Miami, where it gains notoriety amongst the rich and famous. Soon enough, Pablo develops larger labs and more extensive distribution routes into the United States to supply growing demand. With cocaine's growth into a drug of importance in the American market, one that accounts for a large flow of U. The purpose of Murphy's task force is to work with the Colombian authorities, led by Colonel Carrillo, to put an end to the flow of cocaine into the United States. The season ends with Escobar's escape from prison. Season 2 continues where season 1 ended. Soldiers find Escobar and his entourage right outside the perimeter of 'La Catedral' prison but are too petrified of Escobar to make an arrest. In the beginning, little change occurs for Escobar, as he still has the loyalty of his cartel. This loyalty, however, starts to slip as Escobar needs more time and resources to hide from the government. Among the tricks he uses to avoid being seen are riding around town in the trunk of a taxi cab and using young lookouts to report police movements to him. Initially, Escobar easily adapts to his new life, giving money to the community while ruthlessly killing those who try to break away from his empire. The Colombian police and Escobar engage in massive battles, resulting in high tension and unrest in Colombia. Escobar's rivals in the Cali cartel form an unlikely alliance with ousted members of his own cartel, as well as with a CIA-backed anticommunist paramilitary group. After two of Escobar's top cartel members are caught and betray him, Escobar goes on the run. His bodyguard and he hide in a safehouse, where he celebrates his 44th birthday. When Pablo tries to make contact with his family, the DEA and military track him down via radio triangulation and corner him on the rooftops. Pablo is hit twice in the ensuing shootout, and although he might have survived his injuries, a Colombian policeman named Trujillo executes him, amidst shouts of "¡viva Colombia! Escobar's wife Tata goes to the Cali cartel for their help in leaving the country. Season 3 was released on September 1, With Escobar out of the way, business for the cartel is booming, with new markets in the United States and elsewhere. The decision is met with mixed reactions within the cartel. The series was announced in Aprilthrough a partnership deal struck between Netflix and Gaumont International Television. Narcos opens with a title card, from which the narrator reads: "Magical realism is defined as what happens when a highly detailed, realistic setting is invaded by something too strange to believe. There is a reason magical realism was born in Colombia". Narcos' opening theme, "Tu yo", is a bolero written and composed for the show by Brazilian singer-songwriter Rodrigo Amarante. In Spanish, the term narcos or its plural, narcos is an abbreviation of the word narcotraficante drug trafficker. The first season received generally favorable reviews from critics. The site reads, "Narcos lacks sympathetic characters, but pulls in the viewer with solid acting and a story that's fast-paced enough to distract from its familiar outline. IGN gave the first season a 7.
